On a late November morning in the year 1095, this man, Pope Urban II, delivered a sermon that would transform the history of Europe. His rousing words transfixed the crowd gathered here in the French town of Clermont and in the months that followed his message reverberating across the West. The Age of the Crusades had begun.

0:29
The Pope proclaimed a new holy war against Islam for control of the most hallowed site in the Christian cosmos, the sacred city of Jerusalem. Urban’s call to arms initiated a struggle that would rage for two centuries one that fires the imagination and fuels debate even today.

1:11
The story of the Crusades is remembered as a tale of religious fanaticism and unspeakable violence of medieval knights and jihadi warriors, of castles and kings, heroism, betrayal, and sacrifice.

1:33
Now, fresh research, eyewitness testimony, and contemporary evidence from both the Christian and Islamic worlds sheds new light on how it was that these two great religions waged war in the name of God, why hundreds of thousands of Christians and Muslims answered the call to Crusade, and who ultimately won the war for the Holy Land.

2:24
From the summer of 1096, between 60,000 and 100,000 Christians- men, women, and children- set out to walk some two and a half thousand miles across the face of the known world. Their goal was Jerusalem. Not since the distant glories of Ancient Rome had a force of this size been assembled.

2:51
Rich and poor, peasants and knights, these were the first Crusaders. Christian soldiers who endured unimaginable suffering and privation during an armed pilgrimage that lasted for three years.

Questions:

1. Who made a speech that started the First Crusade?

2. What was the goal of the First Crusade?

3. About how many Crusaders took part in the Crusades?

4. How long did a Crusade usually take?
Task 1: Describe the Crusades using the context expansion template below.

Objective:

What is the Holy Land? Where is it? Why is it “holy?”

Describe where the Holy Land is.
Explain why the Holy Land is holy.

Introduction

➡ Directions: Examine the map and respond to the prompts below.

During the Crusades, Christians and Muslims fought over control of the Holy Land (depicted in the map to the right).

1. Based on the map to the right and your knowledge of Global History and Geography, describe the location of the Holy Land.

What and where is the Holy Land?

The Holy Land is a region of the Middle East that includes modern-day Israel-Palestine, western Jordan, and parts of southern Lebanon and southwestern Syria. This area is called the Holy Land because events important to followers of Judaism, Christianity, and Islam took place here.

Jerusalem is the most important city in the Holy Land. Today, because of its importance for each of the religions, the city is divided into four quarters: the Jewish Quarter, the Muslim Quarter, the Christian Quarter, and the Armenian Quarter. Armenians are a Christian group originally from Western Asia. The Jewish, Muslim, and Christian Quarters contain holy sites that are sacred to their faiths.

Historic and Geographic Context: Who controlled the Holy Land? When?

The histories of Judaism, Christianity, and Islam are all related to the Holy Land. Complete the next activity to see when each of those faiths controlled the area and how political control of the Holy Land changed leading up to the First Crusade in 1095 CE.

➡ Directions: Examine each of the maps below depicting who controlled the Holy Land leading up to the First Crusade in 1095. Using the maps and your knowledge of Global History, respond to the accompanying questions.

The Kingdom of Judah

According to the Hebrew Bible, which is disputed by historians, the Kingdom of Judah ruled Jerusalem and the area around it in 830 BCE. According to the Hebrew Bible, the people in this kingdom were Jewish. They practiced monotheism and worshiped the god that modern followers of Judaism worship.

Roman Control of the Holy Land

Directions: Read the secondary source below and review the map. Then, respond to the questions.

The map below shows the Roman Empire at its greatest extent. The Roman empire's land in the Middle East included the Holy Land, at the time known as the Province of Judea. For most of the Roman Empire's existence, the emperors were polytheistic and enforced the worship of their gods throughout the areas they ruled. The Jewish people who lived in Judea refused to worship Roman gods because they were monotheistic. This tension and disagreements over taxation led to a series of wars that resulted in the destruction of the Second Jewish Temple in Jerusalem in 70 CE and forced Jewish people to leave the Holy Land and other parts of the Roman Empire for fear of persecution. Afterwards, the province was known as Palestine, not Judea.

After the death of Jesus of Nazareth, Christianity spread throughout the Roman Empire. Like Jewish people, Christians were persecuted by the Romans, but over the course of hundreds of years its popularity overcame the persecution and the empire adopted Christianity as the only authorized religion in 380 CE.

Byzantine Control of the Holy Land

Directions: Read the secondary source below and review the map. Then, respond to the questions.

After the Western and Eastern halves of the Roman Empire split in 285 CE, the eastern half became known as the Byzantine Empire. This map shows the Byzantine Empire at its height in 550 CE, after the fall of the Western Roman Empire. The Byzantines were Christian, but in 1054 they split from the Roman Catholic Church to create the Eastern Orthodox Church which does not recognize the Pope as the leader of the religion. Most Christians in Eastern Europe are still a part of the Eastern Orthodox Church today.

Rise of Islam and the Islamic Caliphates

➡ Directions: Read the secondary source below and review the map. Then, respond to the questions.

First under the leadership of Muhammad, the founder of Islam and later by other Caliphs that led the Islamic community, the region under Muslim rule grew from modern-day Saudi Arabia to include all of North Africa, the Iberian Peninsula (modern day Portugal and Spain), and southwestern Asia. The Byzantine Empire lost control of much of the Middle East including the Holy Land which was surrendered to the Rashidun Caliphate in 637 CE after a six month siege of Jerusalem. Though ruled by different groups of Muslims, the Holy Land was under Islamic control until the First Crusade in 1095. The Muslims allowed Jewish people to live in and practice their religion in Jerusalem after being persecuted by the Byzantines.

Invasion and Dominance of the Seljuk Turks and Conflict in the Muslim World

Directions: Read the secondary source below and review the map. Then, respond to the questions.

The Seljuk Turks were a group of nomadic warriors from western Asia who converted to Islam. They were part of the Sunni sect. They conquered Persia (modern-day Iran) and expanded their empire to include most of modern-day Turkey, and the Holy Land by 1071 CE.

By the start of the First Crusade in 1095, the Seljuk Empire was no longer unified. The empire was divided and the rulers of each section were concerned with consolidating their own power. In addition, another Islamic caliphate called the Fatimid Caliphate that was based in Egypt had taken control of Jerusalem by 1092.

The Fatimid Caliphate rose to power in Egypt in the early 900s. They gained power and territory by defeating the weakening Abbasid Caliphate whose capital was in Baghdad. The Abbasids, who ruled Egypt before the Fatimids were Sunni Muslims like the Turks, while the Fatimids were from the Shi’a sect. Though the Fatimids took the Holy Land in 1092, their power was weakening in the region.

This passage was adapted by New Visions from the Fatimids Caliphate and Seljuk Empire on Wikipedia which is published under the CC BY-SA 3.0 license.

Document 1

The initial success of the Crusade established the first four Crusader states in the Eastern Mediterranean: the County of Edessa, the Principality of Antioch, the Kingdom of Jerusalem and the County of Tripoli, but the success for the Europeans did not last. The two-century attempt to recover the Holy Land ended in failure. Following the First Crusade there were six major Crusades and numerous less significant ones. After the last Catholic outposts fell in 1291 there were no more Crusades but the gains were longer lasting in Northern and Western Europe. The power and influence of the Catholic Church grew stronger and into areas of Europe that it had not previously controlled as a result of the Crusades because of the church’s ability to unite people through religion.

This passage was adapted by New Visions from The Crusades in Wikipedia which is published under the CC-BY-SA 3.0 license.
The actions of the Crusaders created divisions between the Roman Catholic world in Western Europe and both the Eastern Orthodox world in Eastern Europe and the Muslim world.

During the Fourth Crusade, for example, Crusaders turned on their fellow Christians in the Byzantine Empire and attacked the city of Constantinople in 1204. The Crusaders destroyed parts of the city and held control over the Byzantine Empire’s lands around Constantinople until 1261 when the Byzantines took the city back. Reports of Crusader looting and brutality horrified the Eastern Orthodox world and as a result relations between the Catholic and Orthodox churches were damaged for centuries.

The Byzantine Empire was left much poorer, smaller, and ultimately less able to defend itself because of the Crusader’s attack. The empire never regained its strength and was defeated by the Ottoman Turks, a Muslim group, less than two hundred years later.

Similarly, the Islamic world viewed the Crusades as barbaric invasions and the Crusader states as unwanted rule from foreign powers. Leaders of Islamic countries even into the 20th and 21st centuries use the Crusades as an example of European aggression that cannot be trusted and should be defended against.

This passage was adapted by New Visions from Sack of Constantinople (1204) and The Crusades in Wikipedia which is published under the CC-BY-SA 3.0 license.
Though trade had existed between Europe and the Middle East for centuries, the Crusades renewed European interest in goods from the east. Crusaders returning to Europe from the holy land brought goods like fabrics, spices, and perfumes from the Middle East. They also brought ideas like advances in medicine and technology, and translations of Greek and Roman works that had been largely forgotten in medieval western Europe. Europe’s need to raise, transport, and supply large armies also led to a flourishing of trade throughout Europe. Roads largely unused since the days of Rome saw significant increases in traffic as local merchants began to expand their horizons. The increase in trade led to the development of wealthy cities like Venice in Italy. In port cities a new middle class emerged made up of merchants who became wealthy through trade.

Millions of people, Christian and non-Christian, soldiers and noncombatants lost their lives during the Crusades. The wars also resulted in the destruction of cities and towns. In his Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, Edward Gibbon refers to the Crusades as an event in which “the lives and labours of millions, which were buried in the East, would have been more profitably employed in the improvement of their native country.”

Modern day, 1947-present
Imagine that over the course of the last four years a strange disease killed half of the people in the United States. The mysterious illness caused those inflicted to cough up blood and pus, and blood-filled growths to develop on their bodies. The disease spread easily from person to person and though doctors gave a lot of advice, nothing worked to stop it.

The Black Death, also known as the Black Plague, was a devastating epidemic that struck large portions of Asia, the Middle East, and Europe in the 14th century (1300s). In Europe, it killed between ⅓ and ⅔ of the population, depending on the region. In total around the world, at least 75 million people were killed by the disease in the mid 1300s.

Most scientists now believe that the Black Death was an outbreak of bubonic plague, which is a disease caused by the bacterium Yersinia pestis which lives in rodents like rats. Rats, which were common in Medieval cities, often had fleas on them. The fleas bit the rats, then jumped onto humans and bit them, which spread the disease to humans. Once the disease was in a person it was spread from person to person through body fluid and coughing.

From the beginnings of the Mongol Empire, the Mongol Khans fostered trade and sponsored numerous caravans. The very size of the Mongol Empire encouraged the wider dissemination of goods and ideas throughout Eurasia, as merchants and others could now travel from one end of the empire to another with greater security, guaranteed by the Pax Mongolica.

Michael Platiensis lived in Messina, the first port city in Europe to feel the effects of the plague. The following document is his description of the arrival and progress of the disease in 1347 though the account was written in 1357.

At the beginning of October, in the year of the incarnation of the Son of God 1347, twelve Genoese galleys [trading ships] entered the harbor of Messina. In their bones they bore so virulent a disease that anyone who only spoke to them was seized by a mortal illness and in no manner could evade death. The infection spread to everyone who had any contact with the diseased. Those infected felt themselves penetrated by a pain throughout their whole bodies and, so to say, undermined. Then there developed on the thighs or upper arms a boil about the size of a lentil which the people called "burn boil". This infected the whole body, and penetrated it so that the patient violently vomited blood. This vomiting of blood continued without intermission for three days, there being no means of healing it, and then the patient expired.

Not only all those who had speech with them died, but also those who had touched or used any of their things. When the inhabitants of Messina discovered that this sudden death emanated from the Genoese ships they hurriedly ordered them out of the harbor and town. But the evil remained and caused a fearful outbreak of death. Soon men hated each other so much that if a son was attacked by the disease his father would not tend him. If, in spite of all, he dared to approach him, he was immediately infected and was bound to die within three days. Nor was this all; all those dwelling in the same house with him, even the cats and other domestic animals, followed him in death. As the number of deaths increased in Messina many desired to confess their sins to the priests and to draw up their last will and testament. But ecclesiastics [clergy who work for the Catholic Church], lawyers and notaries refused to enter the houses of the diseased.

Soon the corpses were lying forsaken in the houses. No ecclesiastic, no son, no father and no relation dared to enter, but they hired servants with high wages to bury the dead. The houses of the deceased remained open with all their valuables, gold and jewels. . . . When the catastrophe had reached its climax the Messinians resolved to emigrate. One portion of them settled in the vineyards and fields, but a larger portion sought refuge in the town of Catania. The disease clung to the fugitives and accompanied them everywhere where they turned in search of help. Many of the fleeing fell down by the roadside and dragged themselves into the fields and bushes to expire. Those who reached Catania breathed their last in the hospitals there. The terrified citizens would not permit the burying of fugitives from Messina within the town, and so they were all thrown into deep trenches outside the walls.

Thus the people of Messina dispersed over the whole island of Sicily and with them the disease, so that innumerable

5. According to the author, what brought the plague to Catania?

6. What methods did people use to stop the spread of the plague?
people died. The town of Catania lost all its inhabitants, and ultimately sank into complete oblivion. Here not only the "burn blisters" appeared, but there developed gland boils on the groin, the thighs, the arms, or on the neck. At first these were of the size of a hazel nut, and developed accompanied by violent shivering fits, which soon rendered those attacked so weak that they could not stand up, but were forced to lie in their beds consumed by violent fever. Soon the boils grew to the size of a walnut, then to that of a hen's egg or a goose's egg, and they were exceedingly painful, and irritated the body, causing the sufferer to vomit blood. The sickness lasted three days, and on the fourth, at the latest, the patient succumbed [gave in; died]. As soon as anyone in Catania was seized with a headache and shivering, he knew that he was bound to pass away within the specified time. . . . When the plague had attained its height in Catania, the patriarch endowed all ecclesiastics, even the youngest, with all priestly powers for the absolution [forgiveness] of sin which he himself possessed as bishop and patriarch. But the pestilence [disease] raged from October 1347 to April 1348. The patriarch himself was one of the last to be carried off. He died fulfilling his duty. At the same time, Duke Giovanni, who had carefully avoided every infected house and every patient, died.

8. Explain the extent to which Michael Platiensis’s account is a reliable source of evidence about the spread of the Black Death.

Questions to consider when describing a source’s reliability.

Does the source include evidence about the given topic?
Is the source primary or secondary?

Is the author biased?

What are the limitations of the source to give evidence about the topic?

9. Identify and explain a cause and effect relationship between what is depicted in the map entitled “Course of the Black Death in 14th Century Europe” and Michael Platiensis’s account.

Document 1

The plague had large scale social and economic effects...People abandoned their friends and family, fled cities, and shut themselves off from the world. Funeral rites became perfunctory [superficial] or stopped altogether, and work ceased being done. Some felt that the wrath of God was descending upon man, and so fought the plague with prayer. Some felt that they should obey the maxim [saying], “Eat, drink, and be merry, for tomorrow you may die.” The society experienced an upheaval to an extent usually only seen in controlled circumstances such as carnival [festival]. Faith in religion decreased after the plague, both because of the death of so many of the clergy and because of the failure of prayer to prevent sickness and death....

Cities were hit hard by the plague. Financial business was disrupted as debtors died and their creditors found themselves without recourse. Not only had the debtor died, his whole family had died with him and many of his kinsmen. There was simply no one to collect from.

Construction projects stopped for a time or were abandoned altogether. Guilds [associations of professionals] lost their craftsmen and could not replace them. Mills and other special machinery might break and the one man in town who had the skill to repair it had died in the plague. We see towns advertising for specialists, offering high wages.

The plague came to Europe in the fall of 1347. By 1350 it had largely passed out of western Europe. In the space of two years, one out of every three people was dead. Nothing like that has happened before or since. These general numbers disguise the uneven nature of the epidemic. Some areas suffered little, others suffered far more. Here are some examples.

Between 45% and 75% of Florence died in a single year. One-third died in the first six months. Its entire economic system collapsed for a time. In Venice, which kept excellent records, 60% died over the course of 18 months: five hundred to six hundred a day at the height. Certain professions suffered higher mortality, especially those whose duties brought them into contact with the sick—doctors and clergy. In Montpellier, only seven of 140 Dominican friars survived. In Perpignan, only one of nine physicians survived, and two of eighteen barber-surgeons. The death rate at Avignon was fifty percent and was even higher among the clergy. One-third of the cardinals died.

Long-term population loss is also instructive. Urban populations recovered quickly, in some cases within a couple of years, through immigration from the countryside because of increased opportunities in the cities. Rural population though, recovered itself slowly, for peasants left their farms for the cities.

Source: History of Western Civilization by E.L. Skip Knox, Boise State University.
Document 5: How did the loss of population affect wages for European survivors of the plague?

Before the plague, high population led to a lot of competition for jobs, which meant that employers could pay workers less.

After the plague, there were very few people left to work, so employers had to pay workers more so they would work for them. This situation is called a labor shortage. Many peasants became merchants and other higher-paid professions after the black death because they had more money to start businesses and those who once did those jobs died from the plague.
Document 8: How feudal Lords dealt with the effects of the Black Plague

<thead>
<tr>

</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>• Many of the peasants who once farmed the land have died</td>
<td>• Farm less land</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• Peasants want more money to work on the land because of the labor shortage</td>
<td>• Grow crops like apples, olives, grapes, or vegetables (instead of wheat) or raise livestock like sheep or cows that require less labor</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>• Pay peasants wages, instead of offering the protection and food</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>• Lease (rent) land to peasants who can now afford it because of their higher wages</td>
</tr>
</tbody>

Long Term Effects

- Peasants gained more purchasing power because of their higher wages. They became richer.
- To make more money from their land, lords gave renters longer and longer leases and eventually sold acres of their manor to peasants.
- Lords could no longer control the lives of peasants who owned their own land and who made money from the crops and livestock their raised on it. Over the next two hundred years, this process contributed to the end of feudalism
